October 20-22

2015

Register now for this three day training that will look at the escalation of domestic violence to a highly dangerous/potentially lethal level pattern with identifiable indicators. If it is identifiable, it is predictable.

This training will provide an instructional guide for prosecutors to ensure safety and to determine indicators for highly dangerous/potentially lethal behaviors: to include strangulation, victim safety and perpetrator accountability. Also providing oversight on how to ethically provide all this information with a successful prosecution. Last but not least this training will look at cases in the Circuit Court with victims of domestic violence who have children. You can only find all this information at this one of a kind training.

This training offers no registration fee, lodging for three nights to include arriving on October 19th and checking out on October 22nd, mileage to attend the training and federal per diem for October 19-October 22 and don't forget 3 hours of Ethics provided by Teresa Tarr and Brian Lanham with the Judicial Investigation Commission.
